Monitor identified students for course failures

This year, there were 14 3rd grade retainees, four are African American. These identified students will continue to be monitored by teachers, ESE support and instructional coaches. They will continue to review student's status with online learning to ensure student success by reviewing coursework submitted through CANVAS and I-ready lesson pass rate.

Leadership and teachers are currently compiling a list of students that are in danger of failing their current grade level (less than 10 students). These students have been receiving interventions throughout the year and have been in the MTSS process for tiered instruction. These students are being assigned course work or I-ready lessons that are below grade level to assist in learning as well as video lessons when needed. They are also being contacted multiple times a week by teachers to offer support with online learning.
